Marianne Hendron – CEO Women's Health Grampians (WHG)

New CEO looking to improve the health and wellbeing of local women

The recently appointed CEO at Women's Health Grampians (WHG), Marianne Hendron, is looking forward to her new role. "I am delighted to become the CEO of such a proactive organisation that seeks to improve the health and wellbeing of women by focusing on the social, economic and environmental conditions that impact on women's health."

"We know we have serious issues in our region where the rate of reported family violence is in some parts, double the state average. The rate in Ballarat is 44% above the state average. We also know that young people need to have better access to services and information in our region. The level of teenage birth rates is 1.5 times higher in Ballarat than the whole of Victoria." said Marianne.

Marianne is well equipped to provide leadership in this area. She has a long history of working across the region in the health and community sector in social work and management roles. She has recently been Executive Officer of the Grampians Pyrenees Primary Care Partnership and is a former board and staff member of WHG.

Marianne is looking forward to continuing to work with key partners in community, government and health to address these priority areas. "Collaboration and partnership with community leaders allows us to strengthen our knowledge and our reach to influence policy and social change and ultimately address the structural issues that impact on women's health. Addressing the cultural factors that underlie violence against women such as attitudes that support gender inequalities, sexism and rigid adherence to gender stereotypes require a whole of community approach. WHG is making a significant impact in this area through initiatives such as Act@Work and Leading Change events which has been highly successful in Ballarat.
